Use Data to Make the Case!

- Who are the priority families in your community?
 - How many are there?
- How many children ages of 0-5 live in your community?
- Needs assessment: What are the most needed resources by families in your community and/or program?
 - What resources meet this need?
 - MOU with local health clinics
 - Social Service agencies, etc...
 - How can you connect families to these resources?
- Who are the other early learning programs in your community?

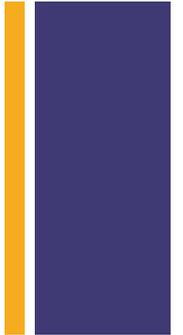

Priority Populations (DFSS RFP)

Sub-Priority Populations (DFSS RFP)

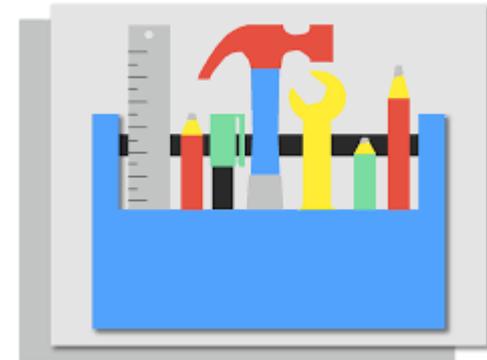

- Immigrant, new American, and undocumented populations
- Pregnant women and parenting teens
- Mothers who have perinatal challenges due to homelessness, substance abuse, educational barriers, or other factors
- English language learners
- Children with disabilities and medical conditions
- Children and families experiencing homelessness
- Families with incarcerated parents

Community Needs Tools

DFSS, Chapin Hall, and Chicago Early Learning

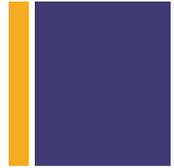

- Access information on children, families, and their communities in discrete areas of Chicago.
- Use it to identify community needs in your service areas, which may cross, extend beyond, or be specific areas within Wards, Census Tracts, or Community Areas.
- Access data focused on young children, including demographic information for children under age six, community-level risk factors, and family composition information.

Family Engagement – Retention of Families

Family Engagement (Goal – RFP)

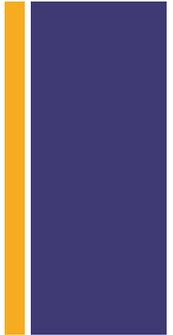

Engage and support families by providing them with meaningful ways to interact with their children's learning and development and attain their own personal goals. Children develop within the context of families and communities – stable families and communities foster strong children.

Principles of Family Engagement

- Children and families do best when their communities are engaged and invested in their success;
- Parents and guardians are children's primary teachers, and programs must partner with, and support them in this role through strong engagement programs;
- Families should be engaged with strengths-based practices that meet families where they are;
- Family engagement is relationship-based and develops over time;
- When family members develop their own goals, they are more likely to feel enthusiastic, motivated, and committed to following through, so programs must value the family's passion for their child and family in the goal-setting process; and
- Children develop within cultures and communities and CEL programs are responsive to and respectful of children's home cultures and communities.
